Hard to see over that hat (Tyler is 6'8").

Tyler was working on his landings today. The wind didn't make it any easier.

This isn't the "walk of shame". It's how we learn.

Tyler has impressed us with his perseverance. He has been working on his landings and improving as he goes. He even consults with other pilots (below). Yes, he went long and wide a couple of times but that's how we learn. Practice pays off because on his last landing (that I saw) Tyler nailed it. As much as we whine about the short runway Tyler had plenty of runway left over.

Thanks to Bill for doing an inverted maiden on my Blade 330 S today.

More 3D maneuver practice with the Raven. What goes up must come down so that includes landing practice.

CONTROL LINE BEARCAT

Brian thinks he travelled in the control circle (penalty in basketball) and that's why he hit his plane stand.

Goodbye and Good Luck

* The gravevine told us that Rick and Annette are moving to Pennsylvania.

Rick is a funny guy...not like one of those stuffy PhD types.

The t-shirt was a gift from one of Rick's students.

Sunglasses are computer-generated for that cool pilot look.

Dr. Glue Expert says he needs more glue on his front landing gear.
